

Statement on New Yorker article, How Hospice Became a For-Profit Hustle, 11/28/22

As strong advocates of hospice, we are displeased with the unbalanced article, How Hospice Became a For-Profit Hustle, published on 11/28/22 in the New Yorker/ProPublica. A few bad actors should not be held out as representative of end-of-life care. This may lead to more mistrust and confusion within the health care system for many. At The HAP Foundation, we will continue to educate our communities about hospice care while encouraging individuals to research providers who will meet their care needs. We encourage you to visit the U.S. Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Service website to find and compare providers.
